

POSAP Project Description

A random sample of Danish adult citizens will be invited via eboks to join this personality panel. Specifically, people will be asked to fill out online personality (psychology) questionnaires assessing several subclinical traits (e.g., the HEXACO personality traits). Further, participants will be invited to fill out further online questionnaires (e.g., on environmental attitudes), surveys, and to participate in experiments. People joining the panel will be re-invited - probably, 1/year or 1/every other year - to fill out questionnaires, surveys, and experiments again. Participants' data will also be linked to register-based data (of course, always after retrieving corresponding approval). The main aim of the research project are as follows:

- a) Investigating how different personality traits relate to each other
- b) Investigating how personality traits affect other important variables across virtually all areas of human life
- c) Investigating personality change
